Each AI flight is created from a unique combination of airline and airport pairings. Each AI flight includes the following, which are also all unique: AI Flight List History: MyTraffic X is able to track the past 10,000-plus flight history for each of the AI flights. Folders: Up to 10,000 folder and sub-folder combinations allow you to keep things in their right place. External Links: Provides the ability to add external links to destinations that are not in the database. This is a great way to add a link to a Wikipedia entry, or another tourism website for an airport. External Links can be added to any airport or city. Let's say you are flying into Philadelphia International Airport in Philadelphia. MyTraffic X can then show that there is an external link to www.pennsylvania.gov. This means that if you search for "Philadelphia" on the website, you will get a listing for Philadelphia International Airport. Custom Filters: When you use MyTraffic X, you have the ability to create custom searches. That means you can type in a phrase that describes what you are looking for. It can be a city, a country, a state, or anything else. For example, if you wanted to find all airlines that fly into Philadelphia, you would use the phrase "Philadelphia" or "USA" or "USA Airways" in the "Search" box. Travelocity: Some of the benefits of the Travelocity Airline Fee Calculator are that it can help you save money. If you use the Travelocity Airline Fee Calculator, it will compare how much the flight would be if you took the airplane directly to your destination, and the flight you are taking. This will tell you if you are actually getting a better deal or not, which may help you to decide whether you should book the new flight or not. To save money with Travelocity, you have to use the Travelocity Airline Fee Calculator. There are two ways to do this. First, you can use the airline fee calculator, which is right at the top of the Airline Fee Calculator. It gives you a breakdown of how much money you will save by flying the airline directly to your destination. This calculator also tells you how many miles you can earn with that airline. Alternatively, you can use the travel fee calculator at the bottom of the Travelocity Airline Fee Calculator. f3e1b3768c
